

To Whom it May Concern,

I have significant concern about the inclusion of housing development in the reformatory conservation plan. This area is an important ecological and historic region within the City of Guelph and development within its borders will destroy it. How can you possibly maintain its historical value by building properties on it? From a past open house, I understand that the point of adding this into the plan is not to allow for the development but to create a framework if it ever happens. But I have significant concerns that by including it in there you are essentially permitting it to happen. People will see this and then efforts to change the zoning by developers will be made. The conservation plan should state that no development is allowed, otherwise it is not really a conservation plan at all. I urge you to change this document.

Sincerely,

Elizabeth Goodale
